

this package contains the universe

Billy Crosby & Siân Newlove-Drew

Opening Thursday 15th June, 2023

16th June - 9th July 2023

One effect of everything that has ever existed being made available to us online in consumable form, is that everything feels increasingly the same or familiar, nothing can be too new or too different - like an oscillating digital Samsara, cycling through increasingly shorter-wave trends. And despite this, messages, images, links, and resources retain a feeling of exclusivity, intent, and invitation. Like blowing kisses into the air or blowing all the seeds off a dandelion with a certain and single breath. The blowing of dandelion seeds is legend for the make happen of mutual and requited love but is also a bright act of insemination. The act is a romantic motivation, and in the world of the individual, the seed spreading is micro to the macro feelings of desire, wanting to communicate, merge or link.

Little pockets of intense private specialness and send buttons and huge conglomerates of shared prismatic hyper worlds bump along; marrying, absorbing, and passing through each other; separating, bursting and re merging. We channel our algorithms into a combined babbling stream, pooling them into shared Instagram posts, Pinterest boards, YouTube playlists and google drives, where they are gathered in nets and fished through. Or sent as a packaged gift, presenting as specialness, as cuteness; as a glowing puppy, a girl, a kitten, a carrot, a symbol, a bubble; reflecting the bounds and bounces of the material world.

There is the understanding that what floats is at the end of its life. The threads of a spectral world and its beautiful constitution is tied up with its hypnotic fragility and imminent disappearance... At once fleeting and becoming- like with a bubble containing its own microcosm, the outside world is wrought on its exterior substrate, fleeting effervescent sanctuaries, constantly remodelling.
